Immigrant Health & Cancer Disparities Service
Towards Equity in Health

Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center is seeking a faculty member to be a part of a growing team of health services researchers across the MSKCC academic campus. The Immigrant Health and Cancer Disparities Service at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center works to identify the causes of health and cancer disparities among underserved populations and to develop solutions to alleviate them. We use a multidisciplinary, community-engaged approach to understand and address disparities at the local, national, and global levels. We conduct research, provide services to people in need, and train others to recognize and address these issues. We are also working to develop a research infrastructure that enables and encourages the equitable participation of the underserved in clinical trials and other research activities.

Candidates at the Assistant and Associate levels will be considered based on the credentials and experience of the successful candidate. The prospective faculty member will have an interest in the area of quantitative analysis of health disparities interventions. A background and record of publication in health disparities, quantitative analysis, comparative effectiveness, cost effectiveness, population health, or a related area is highly desirable. Applicants can be specialists in any number of disciplines ranging from health services research to health economics, with a PhD or MD degree. Joint appointments with other departments can be structured based on the candidate's needs and interests. For physicians wishing to continue patient care, joint appointments with clinical departments are possible. Prior research in cancer is not required.

Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center is a large academic medical center on the Upper East Side of Manhattan at the nexus of several large research institutions including Weill Cornell Medical College, Rockefeller University and the New York Presbyterian Hospital network. MSKCC is an equal opportunity employer with excellent compensation and benefits packages. Please send electronic versions of a cover letter, a statement of current and future research interests, a Curriculum Vitae, one or two relevant publications, and the names and contact information of three individuals who can serve as references.
